History of the Groninger Museum

- The Provinciaal Kabinet van Oudheden (Provincial Collection of Antiquities) was founded in 1874 and in 1891 became the Groninger Museum van Oudheden (Groninger Museum of Antiquities), today known simply as the Groninger Museum.
- In 1891 the new Groninger Museum moved into temporary accommodation on Ubbo Emmiusstraat in anticipation of the opening of its new building on Praediniussingel.
- In 1894 the Groninger Museum on Praediniussingel opened to the public.
- On 29 October 1994, Queen Beatrix officially opened the new Groninger Museum building on Museumeiland.
- The museum became independent on 1 October 1996.
- On 19 December 2010, the museum reopened after a renovation.

New Groninger Museum building

Architects

- Chief architect: Alessandro Mendini
- Guest architects 1994: Philippe Starck, Michele de Lucchi and Coop Himmelb(l)au
- Guest architects 2010: Studio Job, Maarten Baas and Jaime Hayon
- In partnership with: Team 4 Architecten, Albert Geertjes and Geert Koster

Besides being an architect, Alessandro Mendini (b. 1931, Milan; d. 2019, Milan) was also a designer, artist, theorist and poet. His collaboration with other designers and architects gave us the series of pavilions, each with its own atmosphere, that house the museum's collections and exhibitions.

Mendini's basic design consists of three simple, austere building volumes that sit lengthwise in the water of the Verbindingskanaal, linked by corridors. Each volume is made up of multiple pavilions positioned on top of or beside each other. Each pavilion's exterior materials and decoration hint at what can be seen inside: cultural history, applied art, fine art, design. The Groninger Museum is regarded as a national and international highlight of postmodern architecture.

A renovation in 2010 gave the building back its original lustre. All the colours were restored, and Maarten Baas, Studio Job and Jaime Hayon revamped the interior, respectively designing the Mendini Restaurant, Job Lounge and InfoCenter. Hayon also designed the new studio and a discovery space in 2015. The Groninger Museum acquired the Grand Stairwell Installation by the American artist Dale Chihuly in 2019. The largest purchase in the museum's history, the work is on permanent display. The building contains more than 5,000m² of exhibition space.

Mission statement

The Groninger Museum is extroverted, individualistic and colourful. Its collections and exhibitions constitute its heart. All its activities are geared to the public. The Groninger Museum seeks to amaze the broadest possible audience, encourage people to form opinions, and invite them to visit often.
